On Monday morning the street is four. of courage. But when men without this excitement sit hour after hour and bear the cassulties of battle as you did around Petersburg, and see your courades bleed and die on the right and the left, you deserve a merit not given to any troop.

The parties being all well known and harr, heard the case, was filled with a curious crowd, who were anxious to serve a merit not given to any troop. Our gallant friend, Adduschaed General Jackson, truly said webskal left our foot prints and name on Virgina's soil. That having large family connections, and the having large

Each told the other he was cut off from his command, and each felt the truth of the remark, but wouldn't own it. They parleyed and agreed to move along together and what ever command they came out in front of should determine who was the victor. As they, journeyed along they conversed freely, and condemned the harsh treatment of prisoners. They came in front of the confederates and the federal confederates. Colquitt, for he had been introduced to the at a time which tried nea's souls, amid the pomp and circumstance of war. To those present who were not members of the brigade, he could say that the name of Colquitt was historical in Georgia. The soldiers had found in their commander an officer who never falled in his duty; and he had found in his command men worthy of illustrating Georgia in the great battles fought for constitutional liberty. He therefore gave way for Gen. Colquitt. (Applause.)

Gen. A. B. ColQUITT, amid enthusiastic applause addressed the assemblage as follows:

Comrades and friends: There are occasions when the heart struggles in vain to give expression to its feeling and in the magnitude and contrariety of its emotions language fails in its power of illustration and the voice is inadequate to the task. Such an occasion is presented to night, Were I to obey the impulses of my heart I would not utter a word but would step down and take each of you by the hand and give you a heart-warm welcome and close the scene [app'ause.]

We omitted to notice Mr. Brown's Meta-line cotton gin on yesterday. The gin is connected with his feeder, of which account has been given. The gin is made of an al-loy called metaline and presents the rare phenomenon of machinery without lubri-cant. The alloy is so made as to obviate the necessity. This is a great improvement, and make the process of ginning much safer. Mr. Brown is on the grounds and will take pleasure in displaying his gin to all. The Military make a Splen-BLEAKLEY'S LANDSCAPE.

We had heard much of it, and our expectations were high but we were not prepared for what we saw. We pronounce this automatic landscape by far the most wonderful pleee of mechanism of its kind we have ever seen. Everything moves in all the beauty and proportion of reality. The water falls, the boat sails, the engine and ears run by, the mill revolves and all the scene is like a glimpse into fairy land. Mr. Bleakley has rare genius, and has labored most assiduously on this beautiful masterpiece. It is now worth a fortune to him-lie has made arrangements to exhibit the landscape in Barnum's Hippodrome, and will soon send it to New York. No one should omit the opportunity which is now should omit the opportunity which is not afforded of seeing, probably the most won derful piece of mechanism on the continent, no description can do it justice, all should go and see it.

The third day of the fair opened with almost the same cloudless sky, the same bright sunshine, the same gende breezes that have marked the week thus far, and that have marked the week thus far, and stamped it as the real haleyon weather which the ancients hailed as the special blessing of the gods. Early in the morning a few fragments of snowy vapor drifted athwart the face of the tranquil heavens, but soon the blue dome swelled broad and clear above the verdant earth. No very warm sunshine, no clouds weeping upon the men and women of the state assembled at the fair, but a charming day smiling upon us as sweetly as a blushing maid of sixteen listening to her first eligible proposal.

THE CROWD. should go and see it...

COTTON GIS CANTEST.

The gin contest was very interesting.—
There were five or six competitors for the premium. One gin made nimarkably quick time, but it was soon diceovered that it had not gained the requisite amount of cotton. This created some confusion and the judges determined not to decide until the matter could be adjusted. matter could be adjusted.

A Grand Military Contest.

A Grand Military Contest.

At eleven o'clock yesterday, the space inclosed by the race track presented an animated and thoroughly military appearance. It was evident that the grand attraction of the day to the thousands of spectators was the prize drill. They filled the amphitheatre to overflowing, and then crowded upon the terraces, until it was Impossible to find even standing room. Never did a contest of this kind come off under circumstances better calculated to inspire the young sollistening to her first eligible proposal.

Very early in the morning the hotels and streets of Atlanta gave evidence that a very large crowd had gathered from all sections of the state to assist in the grand industrial triumph. Horse cars were jammed until wood and from groaned under the load. Carriages, buggles and carts were rolling in the same direction.

The trains of the Western and Atlantic railroad were heavily loaded; and from the centre of the city to the gateway of Ogleshorpe Park, there was a living tide of humanity pouring into the enclosure, and from thence to the various departments and the amphilitheatre.

of this kind come off under circumstances better calculated to insolre the young solders.

The view from the judges' stand was indeed magnificent. The grand stand and terraces were a continued mass of human beings, the ladies in their beautiful toilets giving to the scene nearly all the colors of the rainbow. Below, the members, of the different companies, were moving over the field, in full uniform. Also delgations from companies in Savannah Macon and

A very large crowd risited this hall during the day, and seemed much pleased at all to be seen. The Constitution has aiready published a list of the affeles on exhibition in this hall. A very hadsome saddle made by Miller & Andrews, f Atlantas, was overlooked by us; also a vey showy picture representing the warehose of Fairbanks scales, in New York.

Another article's a specimen of Bermuda grass hay, exhibited by Dr. W. Moody, of Green county. In one acre of ground, the Boctor at two juttings, gathered 14,000 pounds of hay.

Another noti of the magnificent display of goods, threa and cotton blankets of the Eagle and Phese manufacturing company, of Columbus, isoubtless excusable. As a Georgia institutu we are very proud of these utilis. It isy such means our state is truly fo be man the empire one of the south.

Fine As Department. Fine As Department.

The beautifullisplay of carpets, curtains, etc., mady Chamberlain & Boynton, adds greatle the appearance of the hall. The arrangement of the above articles reflects mu credit upon the gentleman who had tlarrangement of them.
